REVIVING AN ANCIENT ART AT SANTA FE

To those who have fears that the Indian of the Southwest will perish miserably and his wonderful arts with him, the recent revival in the art of Chimayo blanket weaving, both at Chimayo and at Santa Fe, brings reassurances and comfort. The Indian will not be wiped out by hunger or disease. Instead, he will be absorbed into the population surrounding him.
Chimayo was one of the Indian pueblos, named Tsi-mayo. Gradually, intermarriage with the native population of Spanish descent obliterated all trace of the aborigine, and now Chi-mayo cannot be distinguished from the other villages around it.

The Indian art of blanket weaving was somehow or other preserved Chimayo although ever the present-day pueblos have long since abandoned it. For many years this beautiful art was allowed to deteriorate, poor cheap yarns being substituted for the hand-spun yarns of old, and cheap cotton warp was used, making the blanket only half wool.
Indeed, so far had this deterioration gone that the Chimayo blanket looked like a poor, weak imitation of a Navajo. The demand for it fell off, and the art of weaving in and about Chimayo appeared to be on its last legs.

Some five years ago, Julius Gans, proprietor of Southwest Arts & Crafts, regretting the passing of this art which had been closely connected with the country around Santa Fe, became convinced that Chi-mayo blanket weaving could be improved and brought back again to its former high level. The war, with its shortage of yarn, hampered him in the development of his ideas, but only temporarily. To begin with, Mr.
Gans felt the colors should not be restricted to grey, red, black and white, so, taking his cue from the color scheme of the old Chimayo blankets, he used the colors brown, tan, and blue. He encouraged the weavers to use every bit of their marvellous skill in designing, so that instead of a few, stiff, conventional patterns, designs of wonderful ingenuity have resulted. The very finest and strongest yarns of most beautiful shades are employed. The cheap cotton warp has been discarded and good, pure wool warp is now being used. That is to say, the Chimayo blankets and pillow tops now being woven for Southwest Arts & Crafts are pure wool throughout.

Mr. Gans now has about twenty weavers making Chimayo blankets for him, and the demand for them has grown so strong, that it is and has been impossible to have the blankets woven fast enough to satisfy his wholesale customers, who include practically every well known dealer of Indian art goods in the Southwest. "The worst feature," said Mr.
Gans in a recent interview, "is that we cannot increase our output very fast, because practically all the good weavers hereabouts are already working for us. All we can do is to put some of the less skillful weavers through a course of instruction from our better weavers, and to get apprentices."

"No, I don't believe that the art of weaving is going to die out around here. Instead, it seems that the native people are again taking it up, for we have been able to pay them very well for their good work. There is on the contrary every indication that blanket weaving will one day be a most important and most desirable occupation in this part of New Mexico."

Those who are interested in witnessing the improvement in Chimayo blankets, may see one of Mr. Gans' weavers at work in the exhibit and sales rooms of the Southwest Arts & Crafts on the South Side of the Plaza in Santa Fe. All summer this weaving was an object of greatest interest to the tourists who passed through Santa Fe, the space about the loom often being crowded by these spectators.

It is claimed that politics and religion will not mix. Which is the fault of politics and not of religion.
